

“I survived shipwreck by making a deal with the Fishman, and how you could too.” – Raymond of Elster Street

Elster survived a savage shipwreck off the coast of Aylin’s Reach the other week during the large ice storm. With his ship torn to shreds by the shallows, he was left to die in freezing waters. However, a strange being came to him in his most dire hour, a being that was half fish and human/syndar. “I was cold, afraid, and alone in an unforgivable situation. That is when this creature pops up. All it wanted was my pickled eggs that I had in pack. I gave them to it and it dragged me to shore.” Said Elster. So, if there is anything we can learn from this, it is to carried pickled eggs when going on a boat. Who knows when you will need.

Who really is Lord Baron Richards? Could he be the Red Eye Syndar?

Nobody truly knows the identity of Lord Baron Richards: His birthplace, his homeland, his family line. These facts and many more have remained hidden from the public, and even his closest advisers. We know that Richards claims to have come over from Faedrun, yet we spoke to each captain and each of them say, “I do not remember this guy on my boat.” Only two captains were not available for questioning, and that they were last seen sailing back to the mainland.

However, the activities of Richards have been noted to be only in the interest of his position and gaining power. There are multiple accounts of him and his almost ruthless rise to his position. It is without question that he must have some sort of hold over the rest of council to have gained such position as he has.

But some think that the prestigious Richards may actually be something else, someone viler that we would have though.

“I think he may actually be the Red Eyed Syndar that you hear about up north. He tends to disappear once in a while for small periods of time. One such time happened last year in spring when the Red Eye Syndar was reported to be seen around the former settlement of Serai.

“It would have been around midafternoon that day when we witnessed Syndok.” Says noted Alchemist Zhao Cao Bi who was at Serai when said occurrence took place. This was around the same time that Richards was noted to be missing from his private estate on the same day. Does the great Lord Baron have a portal to the swamp hidden in his basement? Does he have connections to Syndok or maybe they are one in the same. We know we have never seen them in the same room together. All we can say is about this mysterious noble is that we have our eyes on you, and our ears are listening.

Are Íoclaochra Really Bird People?!

We have all seen them at least once, these warriors that we pay them for the honor to fight for us. However, it has been noted by more than one individual that these Íoclaochra are never without their feathered hats upon their heads. Which begs to question, do the feathers really come from just their hats? We asked a noted Íoclaochra for an explanation.

“No, the feathers are only attach to the hat. Are you missing marbles in head to think such thing?” said the Commander of the Broken Blade Company. However, during the entire exchange, the hat was never removed to prove this to be true or untrue. It is possible that the Íoclaochra are descendants of the famed bird people of the Richtcrag Mountains. Further investigation is going on into this matter and will be reported on in Issue 24, Vol. 1.

The Rangers of Crows Landing: The Hidden Truth and Cult

There are many rumor concerning Crows Landing's most recent owners: people for the people, entrepreneurs, protectors. These are just some of the titles that they were given by their citizens. Other colonies said other and more disturbing items though: Thieves, black market traders, betrayer's, cannibal's, and murderer's. We at More Doc Monthly decided to get the scoop on what was really going on for you readers!

The claims about the Rangers being thieves and black market traders seem to be based off a few claims. One being when the Longfangs and Rangers tackled a rather tough enemy together. Some of the members of Pack Longfang claim that the Rangers took the treasure from the being when the kill was made by their chieftain, thus claiming right of possession.

Another instance is a report that is more recent, a corrupted individual claimed to have seen a member of the Rangers walking away from New Hope with what looked like reagents in November. However, since it was dark out and this villager was the only one to see this, it hard to confirm such a story.

The other stories are even more grotesque. Stories of cannibalistic rituals occurring during the dead of winter seem to sprout up. Stories of nearby Ulven villagers disappearing in the night but supposed “Mordok” raids are the chief motivators. Ulven bones have been found on the beaches of Crows Landing during the spring thaw in the past, but make will they make an appearance this year. It surely will make you look at the meat you are served twice while visiting, that is for sure.

With all of these rumors and many more spreading, it is hard to report them all in this tabloid. When we have more time, we will bring even more reports to the public! But, one thing is for certain about this information. The Rangers of Crows Landing are hiding something in the depths of their city. Whether it be secrets, to hide sadistic rituals, an underground black market in slave trading, we WILL FIND THE TRUTH.
